Layered Clothing: Temperatures vary throughout the day, so wearing layered clothing is essential. This way, you can adjust your outfit according to the weather.

Comfortable and Functional Pants: Opt for lightweight, quick-drying pants that allow for freedom of movement. Hiking pants or leggings are ideal for this activity.

Proper Footwear: Wear hiking boots or sturdy footwear with good traction and ankle support. Avoid sandals or open-toed shoes.

Essential Accessories: Bring a hat or beanie, sunglasses, and sunscreen to protect yourself from the sun at high altitudes. It's also advisable to carry gloves and a scarf or neck gaiter for extra warmth during the colder parts of the day.

Comfortable Backpack: Make sure you have a backpack that fits well to carry water, snacks, and extra clothing. It's important that it is comfortable and distributes weight evenly to avoid fatigue.

Sunscreen and Sunglasses: The sun is intense at high altitudes, so it's essential to protect yourself with sunscreen and proper sunglasses to avoid excessive UV exposure.

Snacks and Water: There are no sales stalls along the trail, so bring enough water and some snacks to keep yourself hydrated and energized during the hike.
